An increased probability with syringomyelia or length of cerebellar tonsillar herniation can enhance the contribution of CSA to dysphagia in patients with CMI.1. Introduction Chiari malformation type I (CMI) is a cerebellar tonsil herniation of the foramen magnum, which can lead to compression of posterior cranial fossa (PCF) contents or pathologic obstruction of fourth ventricle cerebrospinal fluid flow [1, 2]. The mean CSA was significantly larger in the dysphagia group than that in the nondysphagia group (P
